LSUC membership dues frozen for 1994

Law Society benchers have voted to freeze membership fees for the next fiscal year. The four-member Priorities and Planning Committee chaired by Toronto bencher Thomas Bastedo has already begun the fee setting process for 1994 and has been directed to hold the line on fees currently set at $1,132. The committee will be reviewing all Society programs and activities to ensure that expenditures remain capped and to identify savings which may be applied to reduce member dues if possible. The criteria for the on-going viability of programs will be whether they conform to the Society's overall mandate of governing the profession in the public interest and the capacity of members to pay the cost.

While many Ontario lawyers have experienced a decrease in their volume of business during this recession, the Law Society's work volume has increased steadily since 1990, particularly in the areas of complaints, audit and investigations, discipline and professional standards.

Complaints against solicitors have risen by 50 per cent since the beginning of the recession. Last year the Society received 6,000 complaints—a record high.

Non-payment of fees/levies poses consequences

Members who fail to pay annual membership fees, errors & omissions insurance levies and late filing fees by the final due dates set out in their notices face an automatic administrative suspension. Besides being unable to practice law, the following consequences follow suspension:

- Publication. The names of suspended members are published with the Benchers Bulletin which is circulated to all members of the profession and to the media.
- Financial penalty. Convocation has approved the imposition of a $150 reinstatement fee over and above any outstanding fees or levies owed to the Society in order to be reinstated. This fee will not apply to those members suspended as of November 1, 1993 provided they reinstate themselves before the new rule comes into force which is expected to be January 1, 1994.
- Discipline. The Discipline Committee has adopted the practice of authorizing professional misconduct complaints against members who continue to practice while under suspension for non-payment of fees and levies. Findings of guilt have resulted in members being suspended for up to twice the length of time that they continued to practice while under administrative suspension for non-payment of fees and levies.

Each complaints officer is now required to handle an average of 325 files. In addition, there has been a sharp rise in financial improprieties, including misappropriations, placing an increased burden on the Society's audit/investigation resources. Correspondingly, the volume of work in the discipline and professional standards departments has also risen.

Despite these externally driven pressures on the Society's resources, membership fees have remained relatively stable since 1985. Expressed in constant 1993 dollars that account for yearly inflation rates as calculated by the Bank of Canada, annual membership fees have risen only $105 over an eight-year period—from $1,027 in 1985 to $1,132 in 1993.

Errors and omissions insurance levies on the other hand, have more than tripled during the same period from $1,012 to $3,200 (1993 dollars). This reflects the record volume and value of claims against solicitors that have been received since the current recession began.

Treasurer's message: Holding the line on annual fee

I am pleased to report that Convocation has resolved to hold the line on the annual fee for the next financial year. This, I know will be welcome news to a profession that is clearly feeling the effects of a prolonged and deep recession.

Holding the line, however, has its own costs. In the 1980's when it seemed that money would continue forever to be lavishly available, the Law Society embarked on many programmes and projects—all of which were both valuable and worthwhile. But they all cost money. The current fee freeze will involve a rigorous cost containment exercise which will make it necessary to grapple successfully with increased demand in certain areas namely, audit, complaints, discipline and professional standards. Hopefully, means will be found to accommodate all the demands made on the Society's human and financial resources. In the event that this is not possible, Convocation will need to make difficult choices among competing demands.

Spearheading the above exercise is the Priorities and Planning Committee, chaired by Tom Bastedo, which I created to consider the whole range of the Society's activities and to make recommendations as to the allocation of our limited financial resources. The making of choices and the setting of priorities will oblige Convocation to identify and to rank the purposes and objectives of the Law Society and thus define its role vis a vis the profession and the public. In this regard, Convocation will be greatly assisted by the work of a sub-committee, chaired by Brantford-area benchers Fatima Mohideen, which has been considering these very issues.

Convocation will be obliged to identify and to rank the purposes and objectives of the Law Society

These are challenging times and I think that the discipline imposed upon the Society by harsh economic times may well afford us an opportunity that we would not take up in more comfortable circumstances—to ask what we are about as a governing body and what is highly important in the work we do.

African-Canadian legal clinic gets green light

The Law Society has approved the establishment of an African-Canadian legal services clinic to represent clients in precedent-setting cases dealing with issues of systemic racism. The clinic will also provide summary advice and referrals and will undertake public legal education and law reform initiatives. A budget of $229,000 has been approved by the Society's Clinic Funding Committee for the operation of the new clinic in 1993-94.

Once launched, the African-Canadian clinic will bring to 72 the total number of legal clinics offering services in Ontario at a cost of approximately $27 million to the provincial government this fiscal year.

Proposed complaints policy will protect firm members

The Discipline Committee is seeking comment from the profession on a proposed policy which would permit the Law Society, in cases where it is investigating a complaint or negligence claim against a member, to contact other firm members to disclose the details of the ongoing investigation.

Details of ongoing complaint investigations are not presently disclosed to any party outside the Law Society except the lawyer involved and the complainant. In some cases, other parties that may have information that might assist the Law Society's investigation are also contacted.

The purpose of the proposed complaints policy would be to limit any potential prejudice to the firm's client and to minimize the possibility of a negligence claim arising in which all firm members could be found liable.

This issue arose most recently when members of the Discipline Committee considered a situation where it appeared that a partner in a law firm had failed to proceed with a litigation matter in a timely fashion and had evaded the client's efforts to ascertain the status of the case. The client complained to the Law Society which wrote to the solicitor. The solicitor failed to reply to the Society and his partners were unaware of the ensuing investigation.

In 1991, the Society launched a designated parties program whereby law firms could request that a designated lawyer within the firm be notified of complaints, discipline proceedings or negligence claims initiated against any of its members. No details of these matters were to be disclosed apart from the initial notification. Only 22 firms have asked to participate in the program to date.

Members are asked to submit their comments or suggestions on the proposed complaints policy to the attention of the Chair of the Discipline Committee, c/o The Law Society of Upper Canada.

Update on Rules review

Twenty-seven working groups have been established to review each of the legal profession's 27 professional conduct rules. Apart from occasional amendments, the rules have existed in their present form since 1978. The overhaul is designed to ensure that the rules are current with the realities of contemporary practice and that they reflect an appropriate standard of conduct both in the eyes of the public and the profession.

The structure of the rules will be changed substantially from its present form and the format for each rule will be standardized. It is proposed that under the revised rules commentaries should not form the basis for disciplinary action against a lawyer as is currently the practice.

In addition to explicit one-sentence rules and their comments, the forthcoming code of professional conduct will include an introduction specifying that the rules are not an exhaustive disciplinary code and that lawyers may be found guilty of professional misconduct for violating any of the ethical principles set out in the code's preface. The revised code will also provide a guide to case law sources and a bibliography.

The 27 groups reviewing the current rules are working under the umbrella of a 15-member Law Society special committee chaired by Kitchener benchner Marc Somerville. The special committee plans to circulate each of the revised draft rules to the profession for comment prior to making its final recommendations to Convocation. To date, six working groups have issued interim or final reports to the special committee.

Both the Law Society of Alberta and British Columbia have recently completed an overhaul of their professional conduct rules.

Annual Meeting rules to be changed

A report setting out proposed changes to the rules governing the Law Society's annual general meeting has been issued and is available to members of the profession for review and comment.

The principal features of the proposed changes are as follows:

- Bourinot's Rules of Order are to replace Robert's Rules of Order as the standard authority
- motions will be accepted from the floor of the annual meeting without a requirement of prior notice, provided they relate to the work of the Society and to the matter then being debated at the meeting
- rulings of the Chair will be subject to appeal except when they relate to any matter concerning the conduct, competence or capacity of a member where such is the subject of a Law Society investigation

Members may request copies of the proposed rules of procedure for the annual meeting by contacting Kathryn McConnell at (416) 947-3328.

Convocation transcripts available on diskette

The transcript of the proceedings of Convocation is now available in the Great Library at Osgoode Hall and in all County Law Libraries on computer diskette (Wordperfect 5.1).

Librarians in those libraries which do not have computer facilities for reading diskettes have been asked to consider making diskettes available on short-term loan.
